FIREARMS, AND EXPLOSIVES, et al.,
Defendants.

No. 6:23-cv-00013

TEXAS’S REPLY BRIEF ON MATTERS DISCUSSED AT THE MAY 25 STATUS CONFERENCE

Texas has explained that it suffers irreparable harm in three distinct respects: (1) Sovereign injury, ECF #45 at 1-3; ECF #16 at 23; (2) Quasi-sovereign injury, ECF # 45 at 3-4; ECF #16 at 23; and (3) Compliance costs, ECF #45 at 5; ECF #16 at 23-24. Defendants’ brief addressing matters discussed at the May 25, 2023 status conference contends, as regards Texas, only that the State lacks standing to sue as parens patriae. That is categorically irrelevant to Texas’s sovereign and compliance cost injuries. And it is wrong as regards Texas’s quasi-sovereign injury.

The Supreme Court comprehensively distinguished these separate forms of injury in Alfred L. Snapp & Son v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592 (1982), and explained that, of the three, parens patriae standing implicates only quasi-sovereign interests. By contrast, States have clear standing to assert “[s]overeign interests”—such as “the power to create and enforce a legal code,” id. at 601 (emphasis added), and so Texas’s sovereign interest in preventing the ATF rule’s distortion of Texas law indisputably injures Texas, see ECF # 45 at 1-3 (explaining how the ATF rule distorts Texas’s penal code, and pressures Texas to change its law). So too, States have obvious standing when they suffer “proprietary” harms, Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 601-02, such as a “pocketbook injury that is incurred by the state itself.” Air All. Houston v. EPA, 906 F.3d 1049, 1059-60 (D.C. Cir. 2018). Necessarily, Texas is injured by the compliance costs ATF's rule imposes. ATF's supplemental brief ignores these two irreparable harms to Texas.

Admittedly, Texas's quasi-sovereign interest in ensuring that persons are able to continue using braces to safely handle pistols, ECF #45 at 4, is not as neatly resolved as its sovereign and proprietary injuries. "Quasi-sovereign interests stand apart from" these two injuries. Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602. But ATF is mistaken to argue that this is a non-justiciable parens patriae injury. Parens patriae suits against the federal government are forbidden when the State merely seeks to act "as the representative of its citizens" in court. Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447, 485 (1923). States cannot nakedly "enforce [citizens'] rights in respect of their relations with the federal government." Id. at 486. For example, a State cannot sue the federal government "to protect her citizens from the operation of federal statutes." Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 520 n.17 (2007). Thus, a State may not be able to allege cognizable injury on the bare fact that federal law discriminates against, or denies benefits to, the State's residents. See Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 608, 610 n.16 (so concluding in dicta).

Here, however, Texas's quasi-sovereign injury is justiciable because Texas is not merely seeking to protect its citizens, it is also seeking to assert "its [own] rights under the" Administrative Procedure Act.¹ Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520 n.17; see also Texas v. United States, 555 F. Supp. 3d 351, 380 (S.D. Tex. 2021). One such right is for Texas to prevent and mitigate “criminal activity” within its borders. Id. at 378. That is a logical corollary to Texas’s interests in avoiding sovereign and compliance cost injuries. For example, ATF’s rule creates criminal activity within Texas’s borders through its distortion of Texas’s legal code. And, in addition to compliance costs, ATF’s rule will impose costs on the State to deal with the fallout of this new creation of criminal activity. Texas also experiences ripple-effect injuries from the rule based on how citizens will respond. Some who rely on braces to safely bear their pistols will logically no longer be able to use those braces, and so not be able to as capably defend themselves from criminals, or as safely use their pistols in other settings. And the State will be forced to deal with the fallout when tragedies occur. All of that is more than sufficient to give Texas a concrete stake in this issue. See, e.g., id. at 379-80.

In all events, as Texas has explained, ECF #45 at 5-6, the Court can just proceed to the merits and vacate ATF’s rule under 5 U.S.C. § 706 on at least Texas’s statutory authority or constitutional claims. The Court has power to do this. Texas v. DHS, 2023 WL 2842760 at *1 (S.D. Tex. Apr. 7, 2023). And, because ATF cannot plausibly be prejudiced by this outcome, the Court is not required to give ATF notice of this option. Wohlfahrt v. Mem’l Med. Ctr., 658 F.2d 416, 418 (5th Cir. 1981); Brown v. U.S. Dep’t of Educ., 2022 WL 16858525, at *5 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 10, 2022) (explaining, in analogous setting, how federal defendant would not have valid basis to object to consolidation).
